Responded A Getting worse

I think there is a great undiscussed divide. There is too much attention given to those who are well off in terms of general economics (Delaware is a "rich" county) and housing development is reinforcing this notion (witness the new development along Stratford Rd). We are basically creating no affordable and low income housing for the people who are minimum wage earners. That is a HUGE economic issue because the business community needs low income workers, but where are they supposed to live? Columbus is working on this issue while Delaware is SILENT about this basic need. I read in the Dispatch yesterday that Homeport is expanding to the suburbs. It would be wonderful to have a Delaware official reach out to them!

Responded A Getting worse

There are so many beautiful old homes in Delaware which are outside the historical zone, but they are falling down. It seems as though people are unable to afford to keep them maintained. To lose these old homes in Wards 2 and 3 or to see them in disrepair is terrible. I wish there were grants that people could get to fix up their 100 year old homes.
