My little kids love the playgrounds around especially Veterans park down the street. However, Veterans park and splash pad became so over crowded this summer it became a huge safety issue when 7 day care and summer camp busses showed up. Most of the locals left because the littles were being plowed over and it was hard to watch your kids with so many kids. This happened almost every time we went this summer. We weren't able to enjoy it as a local unfortunately. We started going to Mingo which was overrun with weeds and worn out playground equipment and lots of bugs in the weeds. Delaware needs to add another splash pad/park over on the East side to help with the overcrowding. It's disappointing since we do love the parks but can't enjoy them when schools out.

The biggest mistake that the City has made is permitting developers to build micro parks in neighborhoods. Not only are they painfully expensive for Associations (remaining residents) to maintain but they fair to be practical for routine use. They are always on a main road within a subdivision with absolutely no parking for bikes or vehicles. Worst decision ever. Parents of small children don't walk to parks with toddlers yet the features that are permitted to be installed solely cater to that crowd and ignore the needs of their aging children of those respective communities which result in high levels of vandalism and other forms of inappropriate behavior due to the boredom of upper elementary, middle school, and high school children.

Places close too early. There's not much in the way of nightlife.
