I wish there was an option for too arbitrary. I have a neighbor who doesn't like me and has called the city to complain about things in my yard such as my grass being just barely too high or once when I had too many recycling bins with recyclables in them behind my house, not visible from the street, because I forgot to take it out one week. I see many houses throughout the city and even in my own neighborhood with all kinds of junk in the yards, things sitting on the curb for weeks at a time, grass that is totally out of control, etc. People from the city came to my house and walked around out back to take photos which they then mailed to me with the threat of a fine if I did not get things cleaned up in a certain period of time. When I asked the city why I was receiving letters when there were other people nearby and throughout Delaware with much worse looking yards, I was told that the only enforcement by the city is follow up on complaints received but there is no monitoring by the government. I think this is a bad system because some houses can look terrible as long as none of the neighbors are complaining to the government about it, whereas some people with grumpy neighbors will be targeted for every small infraction.

This is a beautiful city with a great future, but the condition that many homes are in do not provide a beautiful look to those who seek to move within the city. Many homes are let go and no one is concerned with their condition. Hoarders seem to abound and many home are just rented and no one seems to care about the condition, only about getting the rent money. Taking a view of all the roads/streets coming into the city it would appear there are a lot of needy people looking at the way the homes are not kept up.

Q-Want a quick & easy way for Delaware City to make some money? A-start enforcing the grass length/weed height code. In one day you could write 10 tickets in any given neighborhood around this city. Why don't people take care of their yards?! If you have enough money to own/rent a home, you should have enough self-respect to take care of it! It's sad that this is only enforced when someone complains. Why don't we take more pride in our city & start holding everyone accountable for some basic life responsibilities?

There's a lot of houses and neighborhoods that have junk laying all over their yards, not cutting grass where it's over a foot tall, keeping garbage and recycling bins in the street for days after garbage day. There's a house on 36 that has old furniture and junk all over the front yard it's a huge eye sore. Some newer neighborhoods have grass over a foot tall with weeds all over which brings bugs like ticks, etc. I understand things happen and sometimes people are unable to keep up but at that point a well check should be done as a courtesy. If it's the case of being too busy or just not feeling like it then those are the houses that need to be given notice. I don't want weeds, ticks, and some days leftover trash in my yard. It would be nice if the city would give a courtesy well check or warning and give the person a chance to clean up. It would help make our city look so much nicer and cleaner.

I think part of why the enforcement of municipal code is too lenient is that there are few inspections and assumption that HOA's who are less empowered will do the City's job for them. Frankly, HOA's should be disbanded and prohibited within the city limits. What good are the codified ordinances if the City is unwilling or unable to enforce them?
